

Cristina Schmitt is Associate Professor of Linguistics at Michigan State University. She received a Ph.D. in Linguistics from the University of Maryland. She is interested in syntax, syntax-semantics interface, comparative syntax, language acquisition. She has published in Lingua, Probus, Natural Language and Semantics, Language Acquisition, in prestigious conference proceedings (BUCLD, GALA, GALANA, NELS). She is also the author of several book chapters. For some of her publications see: <http://msuacquisition.wordpress.com/publications/>

Karen Miller is an Assistant Professor of Spanish Linguistics at Penn State University. She received a Ph.D. in linguistics and cognitive science from Michigan State University in 2007.

Her field of research centers on first language acquisition in English and Spanish-speaking children (from Chile, Mexico and the Dominican Republic). She is also interested in children's acquisition of semantics-pragmatics, bilingualism and the effect of variation on language processing in children and adults. Her work on language acquisition and variation is currently being funded by the National Science Foundation. She has published in Lingua and Language Acquisition, in prestigious conference proceedings (BUCLD, GALA, GALANA,); and is also the author of several book chapters. For publications see: <http://childlanguagelab.la.psu.edu/publications.html>